PRAY

September 29–December 17, 2022

Korakrit Arunanondchai & Alex Gvojjic: PRAY features Songs for living and Songs for dying (2021). This multimedia installation is built around a series of songs that speak to the poetics of radical consciousness, collectivity, and memory, as these emerge at the liminal space between living and dying, transformation and decay, individuality and community.

Max Weber's diagnosis that modernity is characterized by the "progressive disenchantment of the world," has led many to pursue individuality and human power outside of their spiritual and ancestral roots. Conversely, PRAY invokes the power of enchantment. Through heterogeneous temporalities, non-linear images, and mystical sounds, PRAY returns viewers to an engagement with the animate world. For this, each of the videos is narrated by the voice of the "ghost" that speaks for dead spirits, political regimes, family members, and animals, all of which are entwined together and transform into one another. In the videos, ghosts, shamans, and a dying sea turtle are, therefore, not simply metaphors but the mediums through which processes of becoming and decomposition must pass.

Songs for living is a reflection projected through a wishing pond. On the brink, a cast of Arunanondchai's grandfather's hands plays the surface of the water like a musical instrument.

The film cites excerpts from Simone Weil's Gravity and Grace, Édouard Glissant's Sun of Consciousness, and "On Prayer," a poem by the Polish-

American poet, Czesław Miłosz. While belonging to distant times and places these writers sought spiritual clarity to survive under conditions of oppression, and through the provocation of their art, they refused to partake in the games of power. Instead, they turned songs, prayers, and poetic enunciations into alternative routes to express possibilities of creating worlds outside those dictated by the chronologies of domination.

In PRAY, a reclining blue bird symbolizes defiance against political regimes that while proclaiming democracy in actuality institute authoritarian rule and exceptionalism. Four charred spirit houses also accompany the installation. Made in collaboration with Arunanondchai's mother, the spirit houses constitute portals that help us communicate between the material and immaterial, between the form and the formless.

Installed in the lower-level galleries, Songs for dying departs from the passing of Arunanondchai's grandfather and unfolds stories of loss, resistance, and familial love. Memories of Arunanondchai's last moments with his grandfather flow through the roots of the forest. At the start of the video, the mystical figure claims: "follow my voice." This call reassures the viewer that the path invoked is one of safety and comfort, as what follows is not an ending, but the transformation of human matter into presence, which as Simone Weill underscores, is the same as turning gravity into grace.

Images of personal mourning are interlaced with footage of the 1948

South Korean Jeju Massacre and more recent anti-government protests in Thailand—events that evince the repercussions of US interventionism in Southeast and East Asia since the Cold War period. In Songs for dying, the sequencing between personal and collective memory resists the political instrumentalization of oblivion.

Partially filmed in the summer of 2021 around lower Manhattan, Songs for living addresses the re-emergence of a radicalized sense of mutuality, especially after COVID-19 heightened our collective vulnerabilities and individuation. Presented for the first time in New York, PRAY constitutes an invitation to come together, honor our ancestors, and remember our shared pasts in a moment of seemingly multiplying catastrophes.

About the artists

A visual artist and filmmaker, Bangkok and New York-based Korakrit Arunanondchai tells stories embedded in the formation of collectivity and higher power. His highly experimental works provide the public with immersive and participatory experiences of political and ritualistic nature. As a multidisciplinary artist, Arunanondchai creates videos, performances, and sound pieces in collaboration with artists, filmmakers, musicians, and writers. Arunanondchai earned his BFA from the Rhode Island School of Design in 2009 and his MFA from Columbia University in 2012. His works have been featured in major solo and group exhibitions including Moderna Museet in Sweden (2022); Art Sonje Center in Seoul (2022); Bangkok CityCity Gallery (2022); Singapore Art Museum (2022); and Kunsthall Trondheim in Norway (2021).

Alex Gvojjic is a New York-based artist and cinematographer. His work focuses on creating “hyper-reality” environments that blend video, light, and cinematic tropes. By the transmutation of physical spaces, Gvojjic explores the relationships between seeing and believing creating worlds that feel both familiar and foreign. His work has been presented at the Venice Biennale, Berlin Biennale, Palais de Tokyo, Biennale de l’Image en Mouvement, MoMA PS1, UCCA Center for Contemporary Art in China, the Museum of Modern Art in Warsaw, among others. He has collaborated with a variety of artists including Ryan Trecartin, DIS, Xavier Cha, Fatima Al Qadiri, and others.
